A: I think this is the problem: v You haven't closed the value for v (and thus haven't sent it, which is what's causing the error). This is what works for me (note I've changed the style tag to style='text-align: left;' and the value for v to be hidden): 648931e174

Karen as the "accelerated master of all disciplines." Coming with one year of enriched busing for elementary students, her current district has gone ahead and considered porting Karen's old high school. Cancelling rural students' funding to add a week of enrichment seems, at best, like a waste of resources. It feels "like they're rewarding the wrong student." Nonetheless, Karen was in education for over a decade before she shifted to teaching. She was an "education nut," obsessed with test-taking. However, she lost her passion when she started working at her "dull and dreary" suburban school. That's what Karen said, anyway, when she took the job. After being lost a year, Karen returned to high school to be a "professional educator." She didn't want to just "change the curriculum or broaden the school's approach to what they were doing." She wanted to work with students on a new level. Students who, like her, struggle, but who need to come to a high school that offers them "deeper connections." That is the mission of De La Salle High School. De La Salle has a rich and interesting student body in an area of San Diego with no other public high school for miles. There is a long and a difficult history of public school closures in the city, which were considered a "good thing." In the late 1980s, as suburban schools started building new high schools for the far-flung suburbs, the number of students enrolled in public schools dropped dramatically. This resulted in far fewer public schools, and few students served by those schools. Local officials eventually came to the conclusion that schools were being closed not because of declining enrollment or a lack of demand, but because they lacked money. In 1990, the San Diego City Council decided to close eight schools for this reason. Hundreds of students from the area's historically black schools were forced to attend high schools with hundreds of other students. To help the schools receiving displaced students, the San Diego Unified School District was created, to which all of San Diego's public schools belong. In recent years, the San Diego Unified School District has been able to produce solid test scores for its high schools. In the 1980s, high school

A: A good starting point for this might be nvram. The downside is that it might create issues with you local storage settings and make your Mac like an onion, but you could play with nvram for awhile until you're happy with it. I like to use export_nvram (and homebrew first with brew install export_nvram). I'll show how I use export_nvram to get my main Mac OSX one back and how I use it to get my VM OSX one back. Firstly, there's a few things that will be different in this example. First, the export file will be called nvram_export. Next, I'll export my Mac OSX one and also my VM one. In this case, I'll export my Mac OSX one first: export_nvram -f /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie Note, I can run multiple time exports but I'm going to stop here. This is personal preference. If you run export_nvram -f /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie you're going to see this: Taylor:~ taylor$ export_nvram -f /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie Password: mymacpassword OUTPUT: If you run export_nvram -r /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie you're going to see this: Taylor:~ taylor$ export_nvram -r /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie Password: myvmpassword OUTPUT: For a nvram export to work, you have to setup your cli password first. Taylor:~ taylor$ export_nvram -r /Users/Taylor/Library/Application\ Support/ian.edu/login/password_cookie Password: myvmpassword Basically, I use a login for my Mac OSX and a different login for my VM. For the VM, you want to use a password that someone else can't guess. I use a password like this: myvmpassword And then I export it like this
