Jillian finishes an 11.7 mile hike across the Grand Canyon's Kaibab Plateau last August. This year she's planning to do the same thing from the other side of the canyon. "The view from the South Rim is still my favorite," Jillian says. "It's the biggest and most beautiful." Jillian's always been adventurous and crafty – and she's come back from 2016 on top of the world. She was on the 2017 National Spelling Bee Champion's List, and she's just started her senior year at Arizona State University. "I just made it through finals for the first time in my life," she says. "I hope to get an engineering job, and work on my environmental science and art in college." Jillian isn't the only one focused on the future. In five weeks, all of the students on the Kaibab Plateau Paddle Route, which starts at the South Kaibab Ranger Station, will be heading back to school. "It's a huge life change," Jillian says. But the effort is also rewarding. Every night during their two-week traverse, the students camp out, and a restaurant has gone above and beyond to donate food to their table. "It's like traveling halfway around the world, but it's not," Ryan Steckley says. "It's like a tradition." The tradition started nearly 30 years ago – when the Grand Canyon Wilderness Council gave people a "cup of peace," donating the gift to the Kaibab Plateau. "It was an easy way to give back to the canyon, and it's just part of who we are," says Megan Peetz. Since then, the cup has become an annual tradition. Each year, more than 1,200 people choose a destination, choose a start and end point, and choose to raise a cup to raise money for the GCWC. "It's a feeling when we do it," Megan says. "It's really a form of giving back." And it's a tradition they'll never forget. "

Application of liquid chromatography with diode array detection and electrospray ionization mass spectrometry for the analysis of 3-(3-chloro-2-thienyl)-6-methoxy-2,3-dihydro-2H-pyridazin-4-one and its potential metabolite in human plasma. The novel agent 6-methoxy-3-(3-chloro-2-thienyl)-2,3-dihydro-2H-pyridazin-4-one (JHC-32-2327) was synthesized and its efficacy against human tumors evaluated in a mouse xenograft model. In order to develop a drug-drug interaction assay, an LC method with a diode array detection and a tandem mass spectrometric detection system has been developed for the analysis of this compound and its potential metabolite in human plasma using [(14)C] labelled JHC-32-2327 as the internal standard. The lower limit of quantification of JHC-32-2327 was 25 ng/mL with a run-to-run RSD of 3.4%, for the potential metabolite of 2.9 ng/mL with a run-to-run RSD of 3.1%. This method has been applied to a drug-drug interaction study in healthy human volunteers where steady-state pharmacokinetics (a single dose study) of JHC-32-2327 and its metabolite have been determined following oral administration. An HPLC method with a diode array detection, a one-step sample clean-up (sorbent extraction), and an internal standard (paclitaxel) was applied to the analysis of tanshinone IIA (ST) in human plasma. The lower limit of quantification for ST was 20 ng/mL with a run-to-run RSD of 1.6%, for the potential metabolite of 5.3 ng/mL with a run-to-run RSD of 4.3%. This study provides the first in-depth investigation into the pharmacokinetics of JHC-32-2327 and its potential metabolite, as well as ST in human plasma.
